					Angeles National Forest	No		Old Ridge Route							X					X	X						First opened in 1915, the Ridge Route was a narrow curvy 30-mile roadway that zigzagged across the ridges of the western San Gabriel Mountains; paved in 1919 the Ridge Route Highway was officially named the Castaic-Tejon Route and was the first direct road connecting Los Angeles and Bakersfield; in 1933 the State opened Ridge Route Alternate, a three-lane road which later became Route 99; intact portions of the abandoned route are still visible north of Castaic.
					Hasley Canyon	No		Bowers Cave																			Discovery site of significant Native American cultural artifacts. On May 2, 1884, brothers McCoy and Everett Pyle stumbled upon Bowers Cave in the Hasley hills behind Castaic. Inside they found a treasure trove of native American artifacts, believed to have been deposited there by Tataviam Indians. Among the artifacts were flicker feathers and four sun sticks believed to have been used in religious ceremonies. Nothing so important had ever been found in connection with the Tataviam - and nothing since. Most of the artifacts were sent to the Peabody Museum of American Ethnology at Harvard University, although the Peabody traded one of the sun sticks to a museum in Australia in the 1950s, for what is unknown. Bowers Cave is on private property along the northeastern border of the Chiquita Canyon Landfill.
